 ARGENTINA

South America is the world's most exciting wine region, with Argentina and Chile and Peru's recent entry to the international market.

Spain's conquistadors brought the grape to the Americas in the 16th century. Many of Europe's oldest vines in the Americas were brought over by missionaries, and the wine industry in the Americas began to take shape in the 19th century. The grape industry in the Americas is still in its infancy, but it is growing rapidly and is expected to become a major force in the wine world in the coming decades.
